BIOFF KILLING LAID TO REVENGE POSSIBLY MAFIA MEMBERS

Auto - Bomb Victim Once 'Squealed' in Court on Al Capone Gangsters in Movie Shakedown.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Nov. 5 (UP) -Gangsters bent on revenge, possibly members of the dreaded Mafia, were blamed today for the violent auto-bomb death of former labor racketeer Wil-

"We're certain it was a re venge killing," said Sheriff's Capt. Vernon La More. "We're trying to determine whether any known gangsters were here at the time of the killing, but it's a pretty tough job."

The 54-year-old former cor vict, found guilty in 1941 of a $1.000,000 extortion plot on the movie industry, was killed yesterday when he stepped on the starter of his pickup triggering a bomb, believed to have been made of dynamite.

Violent Blast. Violent Blast.

Bioff was blown 25 feet through the steel top of the

The bomb apparently was planted under the driver's seat and wired to the truck's ignition system so that the starter would touch off the explosion.

Los Angeles police tele-phoned officers here to say that the bomb-killing fitted "a pat-tern of Mafia vengeance." One Los Angeles officer called it "a typical Mafia job." Another of-ficer said, "it has all the ele-ments of the old gangster wars."

Bioff's home was only a few miles from Grace Ranch, owned by Peter Licavoli, no-torious Mafia leader, who was mentioned in the Kefauver

La More said his Maricopa county sheriff's office had received "several volunteer long-distance telephone calls" from police, mostly in Los Angeles and Chicago, providing "good leads about gangster movements in recent weeks."

I know that my retirement will make no difference in its cardinal principles; that it will always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare; never be satisfied with merely printing news; always be drastically independent; never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutorary or predatory poverty.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

As a resident of Wellston I would like to comment on the investigation of the Wellston police system, also Fitzpatrick's cartoon "Wellston Branch of Rat Alley."

The Wellston City Council and the Wellston Chamber of Commerce are not the voice of all the people.

A lot of us are outraged all right but not at the Post-Dispatch.

If publicity and higher authority but not at the Post-Dispatch.

If publicity and higher authority can help solve Wellston's problems—more power to them. We don't need a hush-up. We need a clean-up.

What Radio Offers To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

There must be thousands of shut-ins who depend upon the radio for entertainment during their long difficult days.

Doesn't it seem outrageous that a succession of preposterous and com-pletely idiotic programs should be the daily fare of these unfortunates? Why is this incredible nonsense sponsored by reputable industrialists? sponsored by reputable industrialists?

Is this chambermaid drama the best that can be offered? Surely there are some agreeable things left in life from which entertainment can be drawn without resorting to viperish, conniving females, blackmailers, cobra venom, arsenic flavored tea, trap doors and secret panels! trap doors and secret panels!
Really! GRACE GALE.

Where to Look

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch: Letter-writer Vox Unpopuli must get his sports news from somewhere other than the Post-Dispatch. He commented that the nation's sports rommented that the nation's sports writers were wrong and the book-makers right on the results of the recent Notre Dame-Navy game.

The Post-Dispatch football expert in all of your editions Oct. 27 picked Notre Dame to defeat Navy and predicted the score as 14 to 7. He was just one touchdown off. Notre Dame actually won 21 to 7. I suggest Vox Unpopuli read the Post-Dispatch and learn about things. Or perhaps he prefers the gamblers. Or perhaps he prefers the gambles E. PLURIBUS ERUDITION.

As to Brakes and Axles

the Editor of the Post-Dispate This is in answer to your editorial of Oct. 22, "Four-axle Brakes and No Air." Either you are ignorant of some facts or you have lost all sense of honesty in your screaming fits against the trucking industry.

You speak of trucks "roaring down America's highways" that "normally

You speak of trucks "roaring down America's highways" that "normally have four axles with air brakes on them and an unbraked front axle." I have been driving 16 years and I have never driven one without brakes on the front axle nor do I know of anyone that has. I do not think you can find any highway freighter without front axle brakes. I am anxious to see if you give this letter any space—I would guess this letter any space—I would guess No. CLARENCE BACHMAN.

Editor's Note: On a vehicle consisting of a three-axle tractor coupled to a two-axle semi-trailer, the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to its Bureau of Motor Carriers, requires brakes only on the two drive axles of tractor and the two axles of semi-trailer. Brakes on the steering wheels of the tractor are optional. Such a rig is most commonly used in the West where it is thought to improve steering control for mountain driving.

A Shame on Missouri

It was damaging to Missourl and it ought to be embarrassing to all its inhabitants for President Elmer Ellis to admit the plight of the University of Missouri before Missouri's teach ers at their annual convention in Kiel Audi-Yet he had to speak with candor or torium. cover up the truth.

So, participating in a panel on prospects for higher education in Missouri in the next 10 years, Dr. Ellis said that University facilities were so outmoded and crowded that the University was "not so much concerned with the future as with the present." Under the circumstances, such an admission is tantamount to saying that the University is so busy trying to keep afloat in the midst of its manifold difficulties that it can spend little time charting its course. What business enterprise could prosper under such conditions?

The State University, founded in 1839, is the oldest state school west of the Mississippi, a distinction in which loyal Missourians have always taken pride. But this distinction now is badly tarnished by "the present" which Dr. Ellis emphasizes.

It is a "present" in which classrooms are so badly jammed that several hundred young Missourians seeking an education to which are entitled had to be turned away this fall to seek it elsewhere. Dr. Ellis portrayed it thus:

At Columbia we are using 20 old rooming houses, 18 barracks, five quonset huts and one temporary store building for classrooms and offices. Besides that, we are continuing and offices. Besides that, we are continuing to use masonry-type buildings that are fire traps—one of which was not reconditioned in 1935 when WPA funds were available because it was then considered not worth repairing.

Under such conditions as this there could be disastrous fire, or possibly even the collapse of part of a building, with loss of lives. Should such a thing happen the blame would lie squarely on Gov. Donnelly and the Legislature for having done nothing to remedy or even alleviate the condition.

The legislators, along with the Governor, did, and to their credit, put through a modest, welldeserved increase in the University's appropriation last spring for operating expenses.

But if there are to be any currently needed major improvements at Columbia, the best hope appears to lie in the proposed $75,000.000 state nd issue. This anticipated money is tagged in advance for penal, educational and eleemosynary institutions. However there is a delay on that route. The Legislature has reserved control over the purposes for which the funds if approved at the polls, may be spent.

Until the Legislature acts in behalf of the University one way or another, the condition at Columbia will be as Dr. Ellis described it with one difference. It will get worse

Up in the Air

The Civil Aeronautics Administration's forecast for the next 10 years is a dream for the airlines but a nightmare for the railroads. It is also considerably less than rosy for the truck and bus companies. CAA predicts that in this period air cargo will triple and air transport will more than double, carrying more than half of all pay passengers.

There can thus be little doubt that an over-all grasp of the transportation business in the United States will become increasingly necessary. This will be so, not only to make the regulation of transport integrated and coherent, but also to make it even-handed.

It is going to take more than changes in the law, or the relatively unregulated competition which some railroad men are clamoring for Congress to unleash, to bring order into this picture. The railroads are so essential to our economy that their survival-and their health-are indispensable to industry, agriculture and national defense. But air lines, trucks, busses and barges are essential also.

A fresh look and a whole look is therefore greatly needed. What complementary parts of the entire transportation job can each medium perform most economically and best? What kind of regulation will give these mediums the maximum opportunity to serve and prosper without allowing them to cut one another's throats to the detriment of the public?

These are questions which Congress, the Executive branch and the regulatory agencies have long deferred finding the answers to. The problems arising in the current drastic redistribution of business may make it highly undesirable to postpone this calibre of approach any longer.

Who Killed Racketeer Bioff?

Willie Bioff spent most of his 55 years at enterprises ranging from pandering to attempting a $1,000,000 labor extortion. federal sentence of 10 years in 1941 for trying to shake down three big West Coast movie studios, he was released in 1944 after giving information that helped convict several Mafia chieftains as the real bosses in the labor extortion racket. Now, after living seven years in obscurity in Phoenix, he has been killed in a dynamite explosion touched off when he stepped on the starter of his pickup truck.

There will be few tears for this remorseless racketeer who ranked so long as one of the worst parasites on society. Peace officers, however, are right in checking in earnest to find out who killed Bloff. By so doing they prevent the Mafia or other criminal characters from setting themselves up as an omnipotent force that can disregard the country's laws. That is the main reason why Willie Bioff's killers need to be found.

The Senate Takes Up the Demon

Senate investigators taking over after House Investigators in the inquiry into the unfortunate first Demon jet fighter program have a splendid opportunity to come up with the answers to two highly important questions: Who was responsible for the general fiasco? And why, when the J-40 was found too weak for the plane, was the work not halted at once? All that the House subcommittee hearing came up with was that it was all "an honest mistake."

The Navy first estimated the cost of this "honest mistake" at $78,600,000. Secretary of the Navy Thomas soon raised that to $154,000,-000. Then House subcommittee staff men hiked it to $200,000,000. Now the Senate subcommittee it to $300,000,000. And Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas, the subcommittee head, points out that a later model, the Demon F3H-2, although in production, "has yet to fully prove itself qualified for its combat mission." The principal excuse advanced for the entire imbroglio is that the first Demon program was a rush program based on a calculated risk that was pursued under pressure during the Korean fighting. This in itself is a bitter reminder of the waste that can occur when this nation finds itself in a war it is unprepared for. It is to be hoped that the Senate investigators can point up this reminder and also pin down the persons responsible for such poor planning.

Deadlock But Not Failure

The Western foreign ministers now have suggested a date-next September-for their proposed elections for the reunification of Ger-But it is doubtful that this will change the Russian attitude toward the basic aspects of the Western plan.

Foreign Minister Molotov's return to Moscow during the recess at Geneva probably means that the Soviet ruling junta will have a chance to review its policy, but a sudden change is not expected.

This latest proposition by Secretaries Dulles, Macmillan and Pinay was not made just to kill time. It is good to get everything onto the table so that it may be mulled over. No doubt they also sought to reassure Bonn even though the German politicians would like a more negotiable formula.

The West, of course, wants to avoid a settlement under which German Communists might take over a reunited nation somewhat as the Reds took over Czechoslovakia. This may not seem a very great threat, but prudence demands all possible safeguards. For their part, the Russians want to keep a new Germany out of NATO. Perhaps neither side will be able to satisfy itself in the end. A reunited Germany, after all, will be sovereign and eventually will make its own decisions.

Since there is no hint of a new idea for breaking this deadlock, the next question is whether a mutual security agreement is now possible. Secretary Dulles spoke of "very considerable progress" in that direction. But if German reunification remains a pre-condition, the progress hardly can be turned into accomplishment. Yet Germany has not been considered an obstacle to disarmament talks in the United Nations, for example, so this topic seems open for further exploration.

Likewise there are possibilities of broader cultural and trade relations. So it is premature to conclude that the conference will prove fruitless. Those who see only Communist guile in Geneva might consider whether too quick acquiescence by the Russians might not be a more ominous sign of a "trap" than are arguments made for what they consider their national interests.

Geneva is a resort to reason rather than to pressure and the threat of arms. Even though arguments may not be as quickly persuasive as bombs, this is a gain.

Looking Toward 1956

A meeting that may have an unusual bearing on the 1956 presidential campaign was held in Chicago over the weekend. It was an assembly, not of politicians, but of teachers of journalism. editors and others interested in how news is reported and presented to the country. The purpose was to look into ways and means of observing the fairness and objectivity of the press in political reporting next year.

That the reporting of the 1952 election left a lot to be desired is hardly open to question. More was printed about the Eisenhower-Stevenson race, and more told over the radio and TV, than about any previous presidential contest. But in all too many communities the news columns tended to forget their role and took what amounted to editorial stands. They did this by building up one nominee and playing down his opponent and in other ways.

Thanks to the continued interest of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic fraternity, a grant of $5000 has been obtained from the Fund for the Republic to take the first steps toward a possible study of the 1956 campaign. Such is the background of the conference held in Chicago under the auspices of the Association for Education in Journalism.

Some editors and publishers doubtless will oppose any part of such an idea. That is their right. But those who make a daily specialty of criticizing others are not in position to refuse to sit at least briefly for a portrait themselves. In the opinion of the Post-Dispatch, the press stands to gain and not to lose from a study of the fairness with which it reports the campaign leading up to the most important choice the American people make at the polls.

Old Light for New Days

There may be new pertinence these days in very perceptive piece of historical writing, Alexis de Tocqueville's "The Old Regime and the French Revolution." It could be helpful to the statesmen at Geneva and to all who will be following their deliberations. Not only does this book shed much light on contemporary French politicians and their troubles, but it may help to understand the Russians, too.

De Tocqueville's conclusion was that the French Revolution changed almost nothing. It got rid of the monarchy, but it retained and strengthened the highly centralized government established under the kings. It did not banish the disrespect of the French for those who govern them, nor their contempt for a multiplicity of laws unevenly enforced, nor their hatred of taxation. Their values continued to be prerevolutionary values. In short, the French are still the French.

Harrison E. Salisbury, for five years the Moscow correspondent of the New York Times, suggests that the Russian revolution has had little more effect on the Russians, including Khrushchev, Bulganin and Molotov. For them, Marx is what they say he is. The roots of their attitudes and policies are more likely to be and in the Russian character than in any doctrine.

The Russian suspicion of foreigners, secretive ness, lack of tact and other characteristics so frustrating to Westerners may be found in the court annals of Catherine the Great or in any of the classic Russian writers. The Soviet leaders are not so much following an advertised ideology as responding to their own needs. Says Salisbury:

Rulers change. Geography and national resources do not. If Russia displays a certain desire for conciliation, the first place to look for the cause is in the balance of international forces. If Russia today is following a "soft" policy in international affairs, we must try to find an explanation in Russia's necessities, her economic position, her technological resources, her own estimate of her defense capabilities.

A situation is no less real because its causes are understood, but a true understanding does increase the possibilities of changing it. Looking through a De Tocqueville's eyes, statesmen will efforts on an ideological curtain which may conceal much but behind which less has been changed than it might suggest.

What the Formosans Want

The Mirror Public Opinion

Their choice in a free election would be freedom under a U.N. guarantee, correspondent says; they are still cold to Chiang because of Nationalist massacres of 1947; are interested neither in expatriates' hopes nor low Red living standards.

Takashi Oka in The Christian Science Monitor

The most under-explained story of 1955 is the story of 7,000,000 Formosans and what they really want.

The Nationalist slogan, "Fight Russia and Recover the Mainland" has little appeal for to them the mainland is not home. They have no desire to be "liberated" from the Nationalists by the mainland's Communist masters.

It is difficult for Formosans to talk to the Governor's office in Taipei, they were struck down by machine gum first support to the covernor's office in Taipei, they were struck down by machine gum first support to the covernor's office in Taipei, they were struck down by machine gum first support to the covernor's office in Taipei, they It is difficult for Formosans to talk to

Western observers about their desires, for as many for-eigners in Taipel and elsewhere in Formosa have commented, Nationalist China is still a police state, and no topic of discussion is more likely to lead to a quick visit from the police than a demand for Formosan autonomy. But it seems fairly certain that most native Formosans, were they given a Gov. Chen free choice, would vote for a free Formosa under United

The Formosans know that they presently enjoy a higher standard of living than their mainland brethren.

They have had five years since 1949 to observe the progressive imposition of harsh police state methods in Fukien and Kwangtung, coastal provinces from which their ancestors originally came to Formosa between two and three hun-

They know that Formosa, as a com-paratively wealthy province, would be required to contribute far more to mainland coffers than it could expect to obtain in return, why, then, are the native Formosans unsatisfied with the Nationalist regime under which they now live?

The Japanese treated Formosa as a colony and its inhabitants as a subject people. Farming methods were improved and sugar cane plantations promoted, until the island became the world's sixth largest producer of sugar.

Coal, hydroelectric power, and mineral resources were developed. Primary schools were established and literacy reached a high level.

The Formosans, while giving grudging praise to Japan's economic development

The Formosans, while giving grudging praise to Japan's economic development of their island, resented the subject status to which they were relegated. When, therefore, as a result of Japan's defeat in World War II they were reunited with China in 1945, there was genuine islandwide rejoicing.

Disillusionment set in as soon as the first Nationalist troops set foot on Formosa. The Formosans bitterly told each other that their standard of living was being depressed to mainland levels, and that still they were not given equal treatment. Expropriated Japanese businesses were turned into government monopolies. Food, clothing and buildings were requisitioned for Nationalist troops. Taxes soared. Inflation set in.

The smoldering discontent of the Formosans finally erupted in a protest march on Feb. 28, 1947.

As the unarmed paraders approached the Governor's office in Taipei, they were struck down by machine-gun fire. The Governor, alarmed-because he had but 2000 troops in and around the capibut 2000 troops in and around the capi-tal, agreed to discuss reform.

Gov. Chen stalled for time, appearing Gov. Chen stalled for time, appearing to negotiate with the Formosans, until troop reinforcements he had called from the mainland arrived on March 8. Then he took a terrible revenge. Until the end of March the island was under a veritable reign of terror; reliable estimates place the number of Formosans massacred or missing at as high as 10,000, including more than 700 high school and college students.

as 10,000, including more than 700 high school and college students.

Subsequently, the excesses were corrected, and some of the Formosans' reform demands put into effect.

Today, the island's economy is fairly stable, rice and sugar exports are high, and development of the island's hydroelectric and mineral resources is getting under way.

tions have passed.

A common grievance of the Formosans is that they still are not permitted to vote for their own governor in direct elections. They say that should such elections be held, a native candidate will most certainly be elected, and that the Nationalists do not want this to happen.

As an example, they cite the elections last May for mayor of Taipei, when a non-political Formosan candidate, Kao Yu Shu, defeated the Nationalist candi-

Yu Shu, defeated the Nationalist candidate, Gen. Wang Ming-ning.

The greatest grievance of the Formosans is the existence of a full-scale Nationalist government originally set up to function for all of China, but now restricted to Formosa, thus duplicating many of the functions of the provincial administration. administration.

mainland."

They point out that two fifths of the population of Formosa is composed of children under the age of 15, and that in another 10 years a new generation, both of Formosans and of transplanted mainlanders, may be in control. If 75,000 Formosans are inducted in the army this year, as recently announced. army this year, as recently announced this, too, will probably result in some dilution of the army's current urge to "regain the mainland."

Nursery Rhyme for Graduate Research

From the University of Washington Library Bulletin

Few people realize that "Little Jack Horner" is the great academic nursery rhyme. Faculty advisers, hard pressed to uncover new fields for graduate research, can rest assured that a careful examination of the rhyme will suggest many new ideas.

There is, in fact, enough content in "Little Jack Horner" to keep the graduate school of a university seething for months on end.

Serious students in the department of psychology could have a field day. "Little Jack Horner." The "Little" suggests that he might have had a Napoleonic complex. He "sat in a corner."

be books about animal collecting. Why waste all those exciting moments and amusing incidents. "Three Tickets to Adventure." Gerald M. Durrell's account of an expedition to British Guiana, is a representative example of the genre. The book is written with journalistic polish, agreeable to read and often instructive, too. One of its most fascinating chapters deals with the obsteric peculiarities of the pipa toad, in which the tadpoles develop in pits on the mother's back. Mr. Durrell's account of the shipboard birth of some of these little toads from their epidermal wombs, little toads from their epidermal wombs, while a cluster of sailors looked on in reverent wonder, will not be easily for

Probably the gem of the collection, though, is the account of how Mr. Kahn, the astoundingly in-competent guide, chased a rare wood-pecker into the molasses, and then tried to wash the unfortunate bird with

The familiar cliches of the expedition books are not lacking either. There are the standard reflections on the out-rageous character of zoological names, for example, the standard story of air-sickness on the way into the baseh and sickness on the way into the bush, and other inescapables. THE ALCHEMIST'S VOYAGE by Cavin kanfiald. (Harcourt brace & Co., 312 pag., 31.95.)

This is the story of Ira and Blacky who were shipmates aboard the Liberty ship "Alchemist" sailing out of New Orleans, and the adventures they shared south of the Equator. Able-bodied seaman Ira finds a touch of love with a native girl during a brief idyll on a Caribbean beach, but Blacky, who seems unaccountably doomed because he had been to college, goes on to squander himself in the vice-dens of a South American city. Of the rest of the crew, the most notable are the spineless purser, and Captain Faireloth, skipper of the "Alchemist" who desperately wants to be liked by his crew but doesn't know how to go about it.

Mr. Kentfield is an alchemist with words and has artfully caught the flavor of life in the merchant marine. Line by line, he writes beautifully and accurately, but the story he is trying to tell remains obscure and the disappointing result is a long, fuzzy anecdote without JACK ALDRIDGE.

Long Runs Net Miami 14-7 Win

NEW YORK, Nov. 5 (AP) The bowl hopes of West Virginia's unbeaten-untied Mountaineers were still alive today but only after they had the daylights scared out of them by a stubborn George Washington team.

The seventh-ranked Mountaineers last night rallied from a 7-0 halftime deficit for a 13-7 victory. It was their seventh straight and virtually assured them the Southern Conference

While flashy Homer Floyd of Kansas and agile Charley James of Mizzou showed the only strong consistent running on either side, chunky little Glen St. Pierre lifted two touchdown passes to end George Boucher in the Tiger Cubs' 14-6 triumph yesterday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

However, it was the back-to-the-wall cleat digging of the Missouri fledgling line and the point-kicking of Charles Rash that proved decisive.

Rash, a guard from Shelbina, shrugged off a 15-yard holding penalty to convert from 27 yards distance after the first Tiger TD, then sent the second one through the uprights even though the Jayhawks' Walter Schmidt got a hand on the ball and partially blocked it.

Leading the M. U. freshmen on defense as they staved off Kansas' kids twice at the one-yard line was Don Chadwick, Independence (Mo.) linebacker. Lionel Ferguson, University City tackle, and Dale Pidcock, former St. Louis Southwestend, also contributed to a defense that benefited when the Jayhawks fumbled on the home fense that benefited when the Jayhawks fumbled on the home

PROMISING DEBUT

Show Handicapped by Star's Injury—Costuming, Light-ing Stand Out.

By MYLES STANDISH The twenty-first edition of the Hollywood Ice Revue opened its annual tour last night at The Arena before a crowd of about 9000 people with a serious handicap. Its leading light, Gundi Busch, German-born Olympic champion skater who first joined the show last year, sprained her ankle at the dress rehearsal the previous night when she tripped down some steps in her Cinderella gown, and was forced to bow out.

However, this unfortunate incident made little over-all change in the impact of the show, for it is based essentially on gergeous costuming and ensemble effects. Let it be said right now that there is nothing in show business anywhere that surpass set his production in costuming.

MALLARDS ON THE WING

Ducks by the thousands winging over reservoir at Des Moines yesterday in one of the pauses which mark the migration from northern nesting grounds. Birds, mostly mallards, were in the first major flight of the season and Iowa Conservation Commission officials said it was one of the largest flights to come down the Mississippi flyway from Canada in several years.

OUT OF EXILE

Mohammed Ben Youssef, former Sultan of Morocco, wearing determined look in course of his conversation with French Foreign Minister Antoine Pinay at Paris last Tuesday. Banished from his throne two years ago because of his extreme nationalist views, Ben Youssef returned from exile last weekend. Indications are that he will be returned to his throne in the near future. -Associated Press Wirephote.

ESCAPE HATCH

Guard examining hole chipped through seven-inch concrete which was gate to freedom for 10 convicts who escaped Thursday night from Washington State Prison at Walla Walla. Hole in concrete opened the way to an unused dirt cellar from which the men had scooped a 60-foot tunnel which ended just outside the prison wall. Seven of the fugitives had been recaptured by today.

Dear Martha:

AM a girl of 16. Last month I entered a new high school. I'm trying very hard to make friends with everyone, and I go out of my way doing so. They always make up silly excuses when I ask them to come over, and house. I'm not invited to many parties, but when I am they act as if I were not there. I feel very hurt about this, and wonder what I can do to be more

A Mother's

It's hard, I know, when you feel the others don't like you, but maybe you're trying too hard to break into a particular clique. Maybe if you sought out just one other girl-someone who isn't in a clique either-and became her friend, that would be the nucleas of another group. But while you're doing that, check yourself to make sure you're always well-groomed, pleasant without being giggly, a good student without being a bookworm, courteous without being insincere, friendly to everyone you meet, respectful of your teachers. Join school activities and do a good job in whatever work you're in. I think you'll find in this way you can gain a genuine brand of popularity.

Dear Martha:

WOULD YOU PLEASE TELL ME where I can get some information on sending clothes and things to a child? This is for my class at school. We would like to sort of adopt someone. We are in the seventh grade.

Get in touch with Save the Children Federation, 2110 Walnut street, or the Volunteer Service Department of the Social Planning Council, 505 North Seventh street. These agencies can help you decide on a good project whereby you can help others.

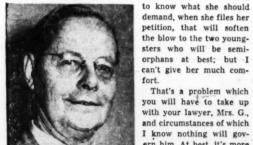

IN ANSWER TO Sara Ann: Your mother isn't trying to keep you from having a good time. She is only trying to make sure that you have the right kind of good time. Don't run out of the house, insisting that you have the right to meet your friends when and where you want to. That's child stuff, and if you want your parents to treat you like an adult, you'll have to act like one. Insisting on your "rights" instead of listening to good reasons why you shouldn't do certain things isn't a sign of maturity.

Entertain the gang with a Sadie Hawkins party this month. Martha Carr can send you the directions. Be sure to inclose a stamped, self-addressed

Some Suggestions For the Hunter

By J. Earl Smith, M.D. St. Louis Health Commissioner

T HIS is the time of the year when the hunter is in his element. Hunting to many is a thrilling sport but it carries with it its own par-ticular hazards. Caution, of course, must be observed in handling a gun, both at home and in the field. More accidents occur at home while cleaning or putting away guns than in the open. Before shooting be sure no person is in the line of fire.

A S we've said a good many times before, varnish does not make a very satisfactory finish for linoleum. It becomes worn in spots, turns slightly yellow and then dull and sort yellow and then dull and sort of dingy looking. If you have varnished a linoleum floor and aren't happy with the results, about the best thing to do is just apply floor enamel over the varnish, because removing the varnish is a real project. But for those who might want to remove the varnish, here is how it's done.

We might as well start off by saying that anything strong enough to soften up varnish will also soften up the linoleum so be prepared for the worst. Use either a non-inflammable Use either a non-inhammanic varnish remover or be sure there are no open flames about and have the room in which you are working well ventilated. Apply the remover to a small area—a couple of feet and the minute the varnish starts becoming soft wine it off with a coming soft, wipe it off with a soft cloth. Don't use a scraper or steel wool to remove the varnish because this will damage the softened linoleum. Continue to remove the varnish in a small area at a time until you have finished. Ar-range your work so that you will not have to step or kneel on the linoleum after the varnish has been removed because it will be soft and can be dam-

3 GUNMEN ROB

BANK SHOUTING

CHICAGO, Nov. 5 (AP)-

Three wisecracking gunmen robbed a suburban Maywood bank of between $25,000 and $30,000 last night.

Witnesses said the men, all masked with stocking caps, ran into the bank shouting "trick or treat."

One of the robbers held seven employes and five customers under a sub-machinegun while his two companions scooped up

NEW YORK, Nov. 5 (UP)-Stocks spurted 12.50 points in the industrial average this week, the second widest weekly gain of the year. The rise came on increased volume-1,938,934 shares on a daily av-

1,938,934 shares on a daily average, against 1,798,381 shares daily in the previous week.

Several factors joined to set off the rise:

1. A steady flow of high earnings reports plus many increased or extra dividends.

2. Belief the end is in sight

2. Belief the end is in sight on firm money rates.

3. An unexpected three-forone split by Standard Oil (N.J.) which also raised its dividend. The actual rise in the leading industrial stocks amounted to an average of around $3 a share. The average closed the week at 467.35, up 12.50 points. Rails finished the week at 152.42, up 2.32 and utilities at 64.17, up 1.92. At the close on Friday the industrial average was at its best level since Sept. 29, rail since Oct. 6, At their week's high set on Thursday the utility average after 11 straight advances was at its best level since Sept. 23.

Chrysler ran up at times in anticipation of a big melon which market men said didn't come. After the close on Friday, the company declared a $1 extra dividend and the usual 75 cents. The 1955 dividends for Chrysler will be $4 a share, against $4.50 a share last year.

Troders Shiff Attention. Traders Shift Attention.

General Foods had its day on Tuesday when it ran up several points in anticipation of favor-able dividend action which ma-terialized. Oils, aircrafts, metals, chemicals, rails and miscellaneous issues were in demand from time to time.

Traders shifted their atten-tion from group to group but over-all the price tendency was toward higher levels. Business news continued to show gains and predictions were made that not only would 1955 set a new record high but also that 1956 would be even better in many lines. Gains this week were reported in state.

REDHEAD From TEXAS

CHAPTER TWENTY CHAPTER TWENTY

MOLLY returned to her hotel.
The desk clerk, seeing her stricken face, said with concern. "Are you ill, Miss Braden?
Is there anything I can do."
"Nothing," she murmured stiffly, clutching her key in cold fingers, "I'm perfectly all right."

But she was not all right. She was furious with a new frustrating kind of anger and it sickened her. She felt that she was powerless against Debra Symington—she would hever think of her as Debra Braden, even though she was H.J.'s wife. She might have tolerated Debra's viewpoint that she would continue the marriage to obtain the money which meant so much to her. But Debra's threats to expose the situation publicly, knowing that the shock might kill H.J. and that she would inherit the ranch as a result, was a kind of treachery new to Molly.

It was some minutes before But she was not all right.

It was some minutes before she noticed the ringing of the telephone. Wearlly she lifted the instrument. It was Walter. "Darling, I was frantic. Where have you been?"

"Seeing your charming sis-ter," Molly said coldly.

He sounded uncertain, "Debra? Why should you go to see her?"

He sounded uncertain, "Debra?" Why should you go to see the re?"

"I've found out the truth, "Waiter. You don't have to cover up for her any longer."

"I' wasn't covering up. I was an assamed. Can't you understand how I felit? My own sister. I had how I felit? My own and how I felit? My own and how I felit? My own and how I felit? My own from your father."

"MOLLY laughed. "She'll be metale to money. She wants to be mistress of El Rancho. There's only one way she can do it—if H.J. dies."

"We can't discuss it this way," Walter pleaded. "Will you come to my apartment and have dinner? I'll have Seraphin go out and buy steaks."

"There was a pause. Then."

"I'll have Seraphin go out want to see me any more after tonight, that's up to you, but I think you owe me one more want to see me any more after tonight, that's up to you, but I think you owe me one more want to see me any more after tonight, that's up to you, but I think you owe me one more want to see me any more after tonight, that's up to you, but I think you owe me one more want to see me any more after tonight, that's up to you, but I think you owe me one more want to see me any more after to the ranch. She believes a reporter will find out and break the story of their mariage. I told her the shock in the tone of the side but there in his sout the side of the side of the side of the s think you owe me one more evening."

In the end she went. She felt curiously detached from Walter. A little sorry for him, perhaps, but their old relationship had been destroyed by the ghost of his sister which would always be between them now.

The apartment was charming. Walter had preserved the beautiful antiques collected by the Symington family for generations which would be passed on to his children and their children. Molly had a passing regret at the thought that she might have shared in this life had it not been for Debra. Poor Walter. She had never seen him so uncertain of himself.

The steaks were well cooked, the salad crisp and delicious, the coffee excellent. The beautifully polished mahogany dining table reflected candlelight from tall white tapers.

After dinner they went out to the terrace where roses bloomed profusely high above Manhat-tan. Walter took his garden as seriously as he did his social life. But there was no pride in him now.

Mild autumn weather in most areas from the Mississippi river west to the Rocky Mountains will continue through tomorrow, Assistant Meteorologist Arthur A. Rausch said. He predicted temperatures here ranging tomorrow from a low of near 50 to an afternoon high of near 70.

Rising temperatures were reported in the mid-continent to
May as a large mass of mild measured 3.37 inches at Boston with lesser amounts in other areas in New England. Five inches of snw was reprited at Lebann, N. H.

Rausch said there is a chance of showers in the St. Louis of showers in the St. Louis area late tomorrow. Temperatures here monday, he said, should be cooler.

Sleeveless Coat The sleeveless coat is a featured style in the winter resort collections, suggesting a fashion idea that may be developed for next spring and summer. The hip-length jacket shares attention with the three-quarter version. Some full-length coats also are included, usually of a fabric that contrasts with the dress.

Linen coats, for example, are introduced with printed dresses.
